

Good morning! It is my pleasure to extend a very warm welcome to you all this morning. We are delighted that you have elected to honour us with your presence and to be part of our 53rd Graduation Celebration. The 52nd graduation was one that filled me with great trepidation. I had just been appointed the successor Vice Chancellor. As I sat on this very podium and listened to speaker after speaker so eloquently advice, encourage and inspire us, I quietly wondered whether I would inspire with the same zeal that my forbearers had done on countless occasions.
